Technology in the classroom is not about replacing teachers — it’s about giving students room to unlock their curiosity and take ownership of their learning. In my daily teaching, I use Google Sites, Gemini Notebook, and Google Vids to help my students move from just consuming information to creating something of their own.

I design collaborative Sites where my students share what they learn to deeply strengthen analytical skills. They work through self-paced study notebooks, and use Vids to turn their ideas into creative video presentations.

For me, my focus is about giving every child an equal chance to collaborate, think critically, and find their voice. On World Teachers' Day, we celebrate the incredible magic that happens when great teaching meets helpful technology to help build confident, capable kids ready for the future.
